NO. 140.

TUESDAY EVENING, JUNE 12.

Mr. Beecher's Last Sunday's Sermon. Mr. Beecher commenced his last Sunday's sermon by saying that there was not a greater respect for royalty than that which was offered in the Jewish idea of the priesthood. In our modern ideas priests and priesthood meant very little. We continued to use it just as we continue to use the word "blood," although it is repugnant and foreign to our modern ideas. But to the Jew the priest was the whoie function of mercy. At the time his text was written the priest had degenerated very much; the priesthood had become a political power, and answered for purposes of that kind, but in the text attention is called to the fact that they had a high priest who had power into the heavens, and was no longer under the dominion of tyranny, and as if that were not sufficient they were told that he was "Jesus, the Son of God. This identification of Christ with men is as if the lower link of the chain got fast hold of men, and then as if you lifted it and linked it as it were with God. It would seem that, in one sense, the New Testament gave to God a totally different idea of man to that which is sometimes taught. Man is the child of God in no figurative sense, though he may derive his childhood through all natural laws and through all instrumentalities. In doing this life is lifted up to a plane of inconceivable splendor. In living a Christian life in these modern times when in books and newspapers there is pouring on to us a light and a great deal of in formation as to physical laws, it is well to remember this great truth, and to endeavor to cultivate the heroic and to strive after the supernal, and not to give undue attention to that which is merely physical. We are to be followers of Christ and to be heroic Christiaus, not on abstract principles, but by the nobler impulse that we are following our leader. The working force in the earlier period of childhood is the selection of some one, either father or mother, or purse, or some other around it as its example. The attempt to reproduce in us that which is beautiful around us, is the natural plan of life; it is God's plan. You remember Henry Clay, how he led men into political parties, how the soldiers of Napoleon made their commander into a demigod. Now, that is the genius of the New Testament, that was the Jewish plan, and this was the way that Christ was shown to men. We have, then, in this sense of active concern of God in the universe the assurance that it is possible for us to live on a higher plane of spiritual life than we usually do. I don't think a man can take upon himself this higher form of Christian life without this idea of a leader; he may take a lower walk, but not

So then in the text it is declared that our High Priest, our Leader, was tempted on all points, as we are. It is quite possible for an army to be enthusiastic for its king; but then he is another sort of a king, and many a sol-dier may say, when he is tired out, "The King is another sort of a man. What does he care for a poor soldier?" But if the King has been a soldier, and sits down by the side of the soldier and eats with him and talks about the old days, it is then a soldier feels that his general is regarded as the best general in all the world. Now, Jesus Christ identifies himself with every possible human experience, and it is by that that he gets hold of our real feelings. There is a double connection between men and their leador Jesus Christ. He is united to us by all that we need and lack. Let us see, then, how this works in practical life. Faith to live a spiritual life comes in the conviction that we have a personal Saviour as a leader, delivered and presented to us, and who is identified with us from reasons that are in Him, and not from reasons that are in us. Then consider, too, the experiences that men have to go through by the inequalities of condition. There are very few persons who are harnessed pleasantly to their circum stances, and whose occupation is in harmony with their ideal. There is not a single priva-tion in human life that your leader has not experienced. The same is true with regard to temptation. We say very little to one another of this airy world of conflict, of pride, temper and all that unrevealed part of a man's life that he never puts down in his journal. But our Master knows perfeetly well every phase of this disease. are not calling upon a young physician who has his knowledge to obtain by experience. It is that I know in whom I trust that He is able to keep that which I have committed to His trust. It is the fact that we are under the eye and heart throb of Jesus Christ who leads us, and whose compassion is infinite in our trials, sufferings and temptations .- N. Y. Herald.

Horse Theves .- Illinois officials have recently discovered one of the most extensive and formidable bands of horse thieves ever organized in the West, and several of the leaders have aiready been arrested. It had long been known that such a gang existed, but nothing definite could be ascertained until last Saturday, when Wm. Twedall was arrested by a vigilance committee at Kirksville, Mo., on suspicion of being one of the thieves. Twedall made a confession showing that the operations extended through Illinois and Missouri, and that several persons heretofore of excellent reputation were implicated. Among these are two named Richmond and Lowe, who are respectable citizens of Havana, Ill. Lowe is a preacher, and recently got up a re-attended to steal horses. Both Lowe and Richmond have been arrested and are in jail at Havana. The officials are in possion of the names of numerous other members, who will doubtless

vival meeting which his confederates in crime be arrested at once if they do not succeed in escaping from the country. The leaders of the gang were located in Kansas City, Kirksville, Havana, Quincy and other places through Illinois and Missouri, and between the various towns there were operators whose business it was to transfer horses rapidly from one point to another. Besides horse thieving there are charges of rebbery and forgery against the gang, whose operations, it appears, have hardly been excelled since the days
